„Cum Deus calculat, fit mundus.“

Mister Dr. William Lane Craig
Talbot School of Theology
Biola University
La Mirada, CA, USA

Dear Mr.Dr.Craig,

you begin the Theology of your book „God and Abstract Objects“, Georgia 2017, Springer Publishing, with the hope „to show that the challenge of Plato[nism] strikes at the very heart of classical theism“ and with the very beautiful reference to John, 1., 1-3:

$(\forall x)(Ex \supset \text{„came into being through the LOGOS“}x)$

As my book CALCULUS MATERIAE, Berlin 2022, shows, Plato not only goes to the heart of classical theism, but directly to the heart (centre) of Theology in general. See the attached 122-page excerpt:

For indeed (Rev. John 2., 17, 2) – all things came into Being through the LOGOS (Calculus Platonicus), and without the LOGOS (Calculus Platonicus) not one thing came into Being!

You are making a grave mistake if you fail to grasp that the biblical (mythological) term „Creation“ (rationally, scientifically) means „Calculate“, and nothing else. John knew that.

Unfortunately I cannot convey my complete book (400 p.) to you, since I'am still in the process of finding a publisher. A small edition of 30 copies is now available in universities and institutes in the USA (FQXi a.o.), Canada, Israel, England, France, Swizerland, Italy and Germany. But maybe the enclosed excerpt is enough to free you from your childish big-bang belief (similar to the physicists and other philosophers). I would be very happy about that.

Every good wish,

Sincerely,

G. E. Streibig alias Chyron
